4.2 Search for Existing/Add New Consumers

Search for Existing/Add New Consumers

To add a new customer, click on the Search Existing Consumers link under the Quick Links section of the Dashboard.

This feature still allows assisters to create a new household on behalf of a customer if one doesn't currently exist, but requires you to first search the system for an existing household record prior to creating a new one. This helps prevent creation of duplicate customer households.

If no customer record exists, you will be prompted to create a new customer record and appoint yourself as their Assister of Record at the same time.

The screenshot shows the Pennie Dashboard interface. At the top, there's a navigation bar with 'Home', 'Individuals', and 'My Information'. Below this is the 'Dashboard' header. On the left, a 'Quick Links' sidebar lists: 'Pending Delegation Requests', 'My Profile', 'My Delegation History', 'My Tickets', and 'Search Existing Consumers' (which is highlighted with a yellow box). The main area is titled 'Enrollment Dashboard' and shows two boxes for 'Total Enrollments in 2026' and 'Total Enrollments in 2025', both with a value of 0. Below these is a message: 'No new enrollments during this period'. At the bottom of this section are three buttons: '7 Days', '4 Weeks', and '12 Months'. The 'pennie' logo is in the bottom right corner.

4.10 Avoiding Duplicate Enrollments

Avoiding Duplicate EnrollmentsBackNext

Most customers should only have one household account in the Pennie system.

When a customer has more than one household record, it can cause unexpected outcomes resulting in confusion, poor customer service, customer frustration, and delays.

Most duplicate household accounts are created when assisters or brokers add a new household for a customer when the client already had an existing household on Pennie.

When working with a new client, be sure to ask them if they:

- Ever had – or applied for – coverage through Pennie
- Had coverage through HealthCare.gov in 2020
 - If so, they likely already have an existing household account on Pennie

The Pennie logo is in the bottom right corner.

5.3 Multi-factor Authentication (MFA)

Multi-factor Authentication (MFA)

BackNext

Multi-factor authentication (MFA) is a way to further secure access to sensitive data by requiring an additional verification method to access an account. Even if a user's password is compromised, the bad actor will still be unable to access the account without access to the additional verification method.

In mid-2026, Pennie transitioned from Duo to Keycloak as the MFA provider. Keycloak utilizes time-out one-time passcode (TOTP) for verification. TOTP is an MFA method where a registered app or device generates a 6-digit code that changes every 30 seconds. After entering their username and password, the user must enter the current code to complete login.

Users may use any standard TOTP-compatible application, including:

- Google Authenticator
- Microsoft Authenticator
- Duo (in OTP mode)
- FreeOTP
- Apple Password Manager
- Other standard TOTP-compatible apps
- Browser-based authenticator extensions may also work, such as Authenticator.cc for Chrome, Edge, and Firefox

5.12 Account Access Issues

Account Access IssuesBackNext

In the system, anytime a new account is created, a new user account is also generated. The "name" of the user account is the email address that the new account was created with.

If you change the email address on file for your assister account, the email ("name") associated with your user account does not change automatically.

For example, if an entity manager creates a new assister account on their behalf, but mistakenly enters their email address as "Jef@agencyname.com" instead of "Jeff@agencyname.com," the user account generated will use the first email of "Jef@agencyname.com." Even if the assister corrects the address on their account after claiming it, the user account will retain the incorrect address.

This discrepancy between email addresses can lead to confusion between assisters, entity managers, and Pennie Customer Service Representatives should either the assister or user account become locked, go dormant, or need a password update.

5.13 Account Access Issues

Account Access IssuesBackNext

While Pennie Customer Service Representatives are trained to check the user account when encountering account access issues, it is good practice to document the original email the account was created with, as that should also be the email of the user account. Should you need to change the email on your assister account in the future, please call the Pennie Customer Service Assister & Broker Hotline (844-844-4440) to ensure the user account email is also updated to match.

This will help avoid access issues down the road, as account activation links and password reset emails are sent to the user account email address, not the assister account address.

Both search tools have a Search by Location option; the assister search also includes an Organization Name search, while the broker search includes a Search by Name:
